Item 2

During the last year's holidays, Members of Your school wild Life club planned and went for a field tour in the south western districts of Kisoro, Kabale, Rukiga and Rubanda. You chose this place because you heard that the area had magnificent scenery made up of several relief landforms, drainage features, a variety of vegetation types and animals among others. While there, you came across a large upland that you were told extended to the Republic of Rwanda and Eastern parts of the Democratic Republic of Congo. You found communities staying on the slopes of the uplands and living a subsistence livelihood. When you asked about how such an upland came into existence, they told you that they were also born and found it there and couldn't tell how it came into existence. Some members of your group were wondering about the origin of the upland and they requested you to help them if you have any idea.

Task:

- a) Using your knowledge of geography help the members of your group understand how such an upland came into existence.
- b) Explain to the local community how they can improve their livelihood from subsistence to commercial and better life.
