The high rate of unemployment and underemployment are due to Uganda's education system that doesn't equip students with practical skills.

Speaking during the 4th Buganda conference on investment, Makerere University economics Professor Augustine Nuwagaba called on policy makers and take holders to restructure Uganda's education system and put more emphasis on equipping learners with vocational skills so as to produce job creators.

"Countries that have solved such problems rapidly have built an education that teaches nationals practical skills. This is the missing link in Uganda's education" Nuwagaba said.

As Uganda's education system is refocused, integrity should be promoted at all levels. Nothing that the most dangerous person to a nation person without integrity.

We need to change the wrong perception that only the academic failures go to vocational institutes. Ugandans should rise up and demand for these changes.
