Introduction

The best thing about The Baby Name Countdown is not that it contains over 140,000 given names, although it does. (In fact, the lists in Part 3, Popular and Unusual Names, contain 81,486 different names for girls and 58,310 different names for boys, for a total of 139,796. If you count the unique second names, the total is over 140,000.) What makes it great is that as well as providing a huge list of first names, The Baby Name Countdown tells you how often each name was used. Every name is accompanied by a number indicating its frequency of use per thousand babies. If there's no number, it's a one-in-a-million name. Of course, The Baby Name Countdown contains other information you'll find useful or interesting: the meanings and origins of popular names, lists of the most popular names by region of the United States and Canada, and tables that show how popularity of names changes over time.

Every name in this book is a name actually given to a baby in North America last year or the year before. These are not fabricated lists of names gleaned from research in a library but compilations of data from birth records. The data presented is based on birth records for 2.5 million children, over half of the 4.5 million babies born in a year in the United States and Canada.

First-name basis

First names in North America are crucial. In the course of our daily lives, our last names are rarely used. Our friends, families, acquaintances, and even people who hardly know us—bank tellers, shop clerks, telephone solicitors, and so on—use our first names. In many instances when we introduce ourselves, we use only our first names.

Traditionally only people who knew you very well—family members or close friends—would call you by your first name. Over time in North America this custom of addressing familiars by their first names developed into informal address for a wide variety of people, including coworkers and supervisors, even religious leaders (for instance, one might call the local pastor Father Mike, assuming his name is Michael) and sometimes teachers of young children.

Many children call peers of their parents by first name rather than the more traditional Mrs. Friendlyperson. Some children, mine included, even call their own parents by their first names. I took care to refer to myself as Mommy and my husband as Daddy, but our daughter heard everyone else calling us Janet and Bryan, so she did too.

Children and young adults are normally referred to in North America by first names, so that’s what they’re accustomed to. As they mature, they may feel uncomfortable being called by the titles Mr. or Mrs. This is especially true if a woman kept her maiden name when she married. In that circumstance to be called Mrs. Husbandslastname is wrong. Since Mrs. is short for “Mister’s”, meaning belonging to the mister, being called Mrs. Maidenname isn’t right either. It’s simpler just to go by first name.

From familiarity to informality, the custom of using only first names is now becoming a security feature. Since one can’t usually be uniquely identified by first name, more information about us can’t be found if we divulge only our first name. When we provide our first name, we don’t feel exposed to potential unwanted contact, but we appear friendly and open.

Conversely, while we seem to enjoy the anonymity of first names, many parents want a unique name for their child, something that sets them apart. Perhaps because of their increasing use as a person’s sole name, more and more parents choose a name for their child that is unique or unusual, making their child more identifiable by first name only.

Although most children are given a popular name, the variety of popular names has increased. A century ago three-quarters of all children received a top 200 name. The following table charts the percentage of babies given one of the top 200 names in the United States over the last century. It shows a slow increase from 76% of babies receiving a popular name in the first decade, up to 80% in the 1940s. Then the percentages decrease until nowadays only 52% of babies have a popular name.

Percentage of babies receiving a top 200 (popular) name
1900s	1910s	1920s	1930s	1940s	1950s
76%	76%	77%	78%	80%	80%
1960s	1970s	1980s	1990s	2000s
76%	70%	68%	62%	52%

An intriguing feature of naming in North America is that there are many more names for girls than for boys. This book contains approximately 81,500 different names for girls and 58,300 different names for boys. That’s 40% more names for girls than for boys. On the other hand, while parents give girls a huge range of first names, their choices for middle names are not so varied. According to Gary Thompson, the state registrar for West Virginia, in 2006 “there were 1,879 distinct first names given to 10,682 males and 2,884 distinct first names given to 10,181 females. But when it comes to middle names, mothers tend to be more ‘conservative’ in their naming choice for female children than they do their male children. In 2006 in West Virginia, there were 2,366 distinct female middle names and 2,381 distinct male middle names.”

In some ways, names change dramatically over time. In the 1950s the name Ashley was rare for a girl. A generation later, it was one of the most popular names given to baby girls. Many of the Ashleys’ parents no doubt thought they were giving their girl an unusual name because when they were children, they didn’t know any girls named Ashley. A few years after their babies were born, though, kindergarten classes sprouted Ashleys.

Some names that were almost unheard of 20 years ago are very popular today. For example, in 1985 the boys’ name Ethan had a popularity rating of 1.9. Now it's the most popular name in western Canada and fourth overall in the U.S. and Canada with a popularity rating of 9.62. Another example is the girls' name Ava, which had a popularity of 0.1 in the mid-1980s but shot up to eighth place in the early 21st century with a popularity rating of 6.91.

Naming is influenced by many factors, such as social factors, like what our ancestors were named or what our peers are naming their children, and cultural sources such as television, film, and books. For example, the names Draco and Hermione, first names of characters in the Harry Potter book series, have increased in popularity over the last decade, from being almost unheard of in North America to having current popularities of .01 and .02 respectively. While low, these popularity ratings mean approximately 23 baby boys were named Draco last year and about 44 baby girls were named Hermione. Interestingly, over the last decade the name Harry has decreased slightly in popularity, from a rating of .21 in the mid-1990s to .15 today, showing that culture can affect a name's popularity in inexplicable ways. Like many trends, names seem to simply go in and out of fashion. For example, the name Tina rose from a rank of 488 in the first decade of the 1900s to 30th place in the 1960s and 1970s and has since fallen to a current rank of 709.

One of the ways that parents achieve singularity in their child's name is through spelling. Often parents choose or invent an unusual spelling for a well-known name. For example, I found 72 different spellings for the girl's name Abigail, which has a popularity rating of 7.27 per thousand girls when spelled that way, including Abagael, Abagail, Abagaile, Abagaiyle, Abagale, Abagayl, Abagayle, and so on, not to mention all the spelling variations for Abby.

Another spelling option is to add punctuation, an accent or an apostrophe. There were over 5,000 apostrophes in the boys' names and 8,000 in the girls' names. Many of these apostrophes were intended to be accents on the preceding or following vowel, but due to data processing limitations the accents were input as apostrophes. (Where it was clear that an apostrophe was an accent, such as after an e at the end of the name, I changed the apostrophe to appear as, for instance, é.)

Another way that parents achieve singularity in names is by using English words that aren't typically names. This is my favorite type of naming creativity. For instance, in the list of unusual names in Part 3 you'll find such surprises as Illusion, Tomorrow, and Matrix.

On the other hand, in some ways names don't change. Two decades ago Michael was the most popular name for boys, with a popularity rating of 32.37. One decade ago Michael was still the most popular name for boys, but its popularity rating had decreased to 19.47. Nowadays Michael is the third most popular name, with a popularity rating of 9.98. In other words, Michael has been a very popular name for decades.

In particular, from one year to the next the most popular names don't change greatly. Compare, for instance, the top 10 names in Florida in 2006, 2005, and 1995.

The top seven names for boys in Florida are unchanged from 2005 to 2006, and the eighth, ninth, and 10th most popular are the same three names in different order. In fact, seven of the top 10 names didn't change in the decade from 1995 to 2005. Similarly, in 2005 and 2006 the top five names for girls were the same names in slightly different order. The only real change in the top 10 list was replacing Samantha and Ashley with Ava and Mia. Three of the top 10 names in 1995 were still in the top 10 a decade later.

Another way that names don’t change is in meaning and origin. The name Ashley, for example, comes from an English word meaning “from the ash tree meadow.” The meaning and origin of Ashley is unchanging.

The organization of this book

The Baby Name Countdown is divided into three main sections. Part 1, The Top Names, starts with lists of the 100 most popular first names for babies born recently in all of the United States and Canada and in particular regions of those countries. That’s followed by lists of the 100 most popular names in the years 2001 to 2006 in the United States. As well, there’s a chart of the 500 most popular names of the last century, showing the change in rank of each name over the ten decades from 1900 to 2006 in the United States. It’s fascinating, not just for prospective parents, to note the rise and fall of a name over time.

Part 2, Popular Names with Popularity Ratings, Origins, and Meanings, is a listing of currently popular names along with their etymologies—their meanings and origins—as well as popularity ratings.

Part 3, Popular and Unusual Names with Popularity Ratings, is the heart of the book. It contains two lists—one for boys and one for girls—of 140,000 names recently given to 2.5 million babies in the U.S.A. and Canada, with a popularity rating for all but the rare names, which are those with a popularity rating less than .01.

Using the popularity ratings

Popularity rating numbers indicate how many baby girls or boys per thousand were given that first name. For example, a popularity rating of 1.0 indicates that one of every thousand girls or boys born was given that first name. Although it doesn’t sound like much, a name with a frequency of one per thousand is a fairly popular name. Similarly, a popularity rating of .10 indicates that one of every 10,000 baby girls or boys was given that name, and a popularity rating of .01 indicates that one of every 100,000 baby girls or boys was given that first name. In Part 3, Popular and Unusual Names with Popularity Ratings, names which do not have a popularity rating indicated are rare names with a frequency of less than one in 100,000. Often these names are one in a million, such as Rylicia or Dollarian.

Popularity ratings
Rating	Frequency of use
10.00	One boy or girl out of 100 received this name
1.00	One girl or boy out of 1,000 received this name
.10	One boy or girl out of 10,000 received this name
.01	One girl or boy out of 100,000 received this name
No number	One in a million! Only one boy or girl out of more than 100,000 received this name

The simplest way to understand popularity ratings is to view them relatively: the higher the number, the more popular the name. So, for instance, you can use the popularity ratings to choose the most popular spelling of a name.

But the ratings can also be multiplied or added. A name with a popularity rating of 2 is twice as popular as one with a rating of 1. So you could add up the popularity ratings for all the variant spellings of Christopher to find out whether it is actually more popular than Michael.

Popularity ratings indicate popularity per thousand boys or girls, but by moving the decimal places in the population and the popularity rating to the right or left, you can quickly calculate other statistical frequencies.

For example, the name Linda has a popularity of

.25 per 1,000
which is equivalent to
.025 per 100
2.5 per 10,000
25 per 100,000
and 250 per 1,000,000.

You can go further with the data in The Baby Name Countdown and estimate roughly how many children in any geographic location will receive a certain name.

Start with this fact: the birth rate in the United States is approximately 14 per thousand, meaning that for every thousand people in the population, 14 children are born in a year. In Canada the current birth rate is about 11 per thousand.

To calculate the approximate number of children that will be born in any location in the United States, multiply that location's population by .014 (14 divided by 1,000). For Canada multiply the location's population by .011.

Just over half, 51%, of babies are boys, so to calculate the approximate number of boys that will be born in any location in the United States, multiply that location's population by .00714. (That's 14 divided by 1,000 times .51.) For boys in Canada multiply the location's population by .00561.

Just under half, 49%, of babies are girls, so to calculate the approximate number of girls that will be born in any location in the United States, multiply that location's population by .00686. (That's 14 divided by 1,000 times .49.) For girls in Canada multiply the location's population by .00539.

The formula is

(1) $b = g \times r$

where b is the number of births, g is the population of some location, and r is:

- .00714 for boys in the United States
- .00686 for girls in the United States
- .00561 for boys in Canada
- .00539 for girls in Canada or
- .014 for boys and girls combined in the United States or
- .011 for boys and girls combined in Canada.

Once you know the number of children born in a year in a community, you can estimate how many might be given a certain name using the second formula:

$$(2) \quad n = b \times p/1,000$$

where n is the number of children who will receive a particular name, and p is the popularity rating of that name.

For example, I can estimate how many children will be named Linda this year in an American city with a population of about 800,000. First calculate the approximate number of girls that will be born.

$$\begin{aligned} (1) \quad b &= g \times .00686 \\ b &= 800,000 \times .00686 \\ b &= 5,488 \end{aligned}$$

The popularity rating for the name Linda is .25. To estimate how many girls will be named Linda, use the second formula:

$$\begin{aligned} (2) \quad n &= b \times p/1,000 \\ n &= 5,488 \times .25/1,000 \\ n &= 1.372 \end{aligned}$$

Based on current trends, one girl born in this city this year will be named Linda.

You could also estimate the frequency of use of a name among a population using the following formula:

$$(3) \quad n = s \times p/1,000$$

where s is the number of children in the sample.

For example, if I'm curious how many children might have the name Michael in a kindergarten class of 30 children in four or five years, I can plug values into formula (3) thus:

$$\begin{aligned} s &= 15 \text{ [the number of boys expected in the} \\ &\quad \text{class]} \\ p &= 9.98 \text{ [the popularity rating for Michael]} \\ n &= s \times p/1,000 \\ n &= 15 \times 9.98/1,000 \\ n &= .1497 \end{aligned}$$

In other words, I calculate that most kindergarten classes won't have a boy named Michael.

The point of these examples is that you can play with the popularity ratings to estimate a statistical likelihood of a certain number of children having a particular name in a particular place. (The term "statistical" reminds you that any calculations based on the data do not give you actual frequencies of use of names but estimated—or statistical—probabilities based on all of the data collected being summed together. Further, due to rounding and regional variations, these estimated probabilities are approximations.)

Fortunately for prospective parents searching for the perfect name for their baby, The Baby Name Countdown contains all the information needed to make the choice. It isn't enough to know what a name means or where it came from; you need to know how popular that name is. Whether you want to ensure your child is in synch with the times by giving her or him a popular name or you want your child's name to be unique, you'll find the names and popularity ratings you need in The Baby Name Countdown.

The Top 500 Names— Rankings over the Last Century

As well as recording the change in popularity of first names over the last century and a bit, these lists give prospective parents ideas for names that were once popular but have gone out of fashion. Perhaps it's time for a revival!

Each year most babies—70% of the boys and 60% of the girls—receive a name in the top 500 rank of popularity.

Girls' Names

The number to the left of the name is a popularity rating indicating the frequency of use per thousand baby girls born in the decades from the 1900s to the mid-2000s. A higher number represents greater popularity. For each decade in this time frame the rank of the name appears to the right of the name, a lower number meaning the name was more popular in that decade, 1 being the most popular.

Boys' Names

The popularity rating to the left of the name indicates the frequency of usage per thousand baby boys born over the period from 1900 to 2006. A higher number represents greater popularity. For each decade in this time frame the rank of the name appears to the right of the name, a lower number meaning the name was more popular in that decade, 1 being the most popular.

Popular and Unusual Names

with Popularity Ratings

Parentheses after a name contain its popularity rating, which is the frequency of use per thousand baby girls or boys born. Names without numbers have a popularity rating of less than .01. In other words, fewer than one in 100,000 baby girls or baby boys received that name. Many of these names are one in a million or are unique in North America.
